Once they click on the part they wish to view they are taken to an overview page. There they can add details and a photograph of the part. So far everything is working fine. However, when a user clicks on the photograph, I'd like them to be taken to the parts page of the part they clicked. I want to make sure that a user can't create more parts than they are allowed to. So I thought about how I could redirect them to the parts controller once a picture is clicked but not have it redirect them anywhere if they click on a picture. How could I go about doing this? A: you can use a before_action filter, use the one you want to redirect to the parts#view 1d6a3396d6

The first wave of the season, which usually starts in November, is expected to hit most of Europe, bringing below-freezing temperatures that are likely to lead to snow and freezing rain in some regions. Already, places like Scotland, northern Italy, eastern France and Sweden have been hit by the freezing winds and heavy snowfall. The forecast is for the weather to stay dry in southern Europe, but the weather will be chillier and windier than average in the north and east. The second wave arrives on 1 February, bringing heatwaves and temperatures up to four or five times the normal average for that day, particularly in Europe, Central Asia and Russia. "This is a summer weather event," says Chris Barrie, the chief of UK Met Office's Climate Prediction and Research Unit.
